

What am I?

Name _____

1. I am a by-product of the bones and horns of beef and dairy cattle. You can find me in the candy section or at the checkout counter at any grocery or convenience store. I'm wrapped individually, but come in a package with five or more sticks. You enjoy me in many different flavors, but you're probably not allowed to have me at school. What by-product am I?
2. Teachers use me in most schools on a daily basis to write things for you to read. Fatty acids and glycerin from pigs are used to form me into a stick. My most common color is white, but I can be found in just about any color you desire. Many kids like to use me on the sidewalk. What by-product am I?

3. Part of me is a by-product of chicken and ducks. I'm used on a seasonal basis and get the most use during the fall months. The people who use me usually wear camouflage clothing, that is, unless they are Robin Hood. What by-product am I?

4. To help the "rubber" part of me hold my shape, I contain stearic acid, which comes from the gland and organ fats of cattle. I do a lot of "traveling" and usually come in sets of four. If one of me gets a hole, the other three cannot "travel" at all without the fourth one being fixed. What by-product am I?
5. I'm a by-product from the hide of cattle. I'm used by people of all ages and my "season" becomes very popular around August. You'll find me in large and small communities and on Saturdays and Sundays you can sometimes see me flying through the air on national television. What by-product am I?
6. I come from a variety of animals, including cattle, hogs and rabbits. I usually come in a can or bag, can be served wet or dry, and can be purchased at the grocery store. I can be eaten, however, you wouldn't eat me. (Hint: I can be eaten by mammals, reptiles, amphibians, and birds.) What by-product am I?
7. I can be found in all colors and am a by-product of cattle and hogs. You'll usually find children using me on paper. If they were to use me on walls, like you probably did when you were little, they'd be in big trouble with Mom. What by-product am I?

8. I'm a by-product of cattle. Many times I'm used to light dark or dim places. However, I don't use electricity and I don't need a battery; I do need a flame. What am I?

9. I'm a by-product of many animals. I'm used in gardens and lawns to help things grow. You can find me in different size bags at the store. Some people might use manure to accomplish the same thing I do. What by-product am I?

10. I am added to many of your sandwiches and am a product of chickens. I can be bought at the grocery store and must be refrigerated after I'm opened. If you leave me out in the heat too long before you eat me, I can make you very sick. What by-product am I?

11. I am processed using the bones and horns of cattle. I'm often used at special occasions or events and on vacations. If left alone I'm not much fun to look at, but if you have me processed I can recreate many wonderful memories. What by-product am I?

12. I am a by-product of cattle and pigs. I'm very popular with women, models, and actors. Many women use me on a daily basis to enhance their features. I come in all different sizes, shapes and shades. If you look around the room you might see one of your friends with some of me on now! What by-product am I?

13. You'll find me as a by-product of cattle. I come in a bag and can be bought at the grocery store. I come in two sizes – large and small. My small size is commonly used during the winter months to top off a hot drink. You'll find my larger size being used around a campfire or to make S'mores. What by-product am I?

14. I'm a by-product of the fatty acids and glycerin of pork. I'm very small, but if used improperly I can cause a lot of damage. I'm not very fancy to look at, but if struck just right I can produce a beautiful glow. What by-product am I?

15. I'm a by-product of cattle, hogs, and sheep. I'm very beneficial to people, especially those who are sick. I come in all different sizes, shapes and colors and serve a variety of ill people. You can find some of me in the store, but others of me must come from your doctor. What by-product am I?
